

The Art of the Everyday

A little beauty in the moments that make life yours.

A campaign idea for Anthropologie built around the small, ordinary rituals that make a day feel like yours.

Finding beauty in the familiar

BRAND INSIGHT

Anthropologie isn't really selling a dress or a vase. It's selling the feeling of finding something that fits you, whether that's what you wear, how you set up a room, or how you spend a slow Sunday.

CREATIVE OPPORTUNITY

Fashion, home, and beauty are usually shopped separately. Everyday rituals, like morning coffee or dinner with friends, are a natural way to tie them together, online and in the store.

CAMPAIGN OBJECTIVE

Build one look that people recognize right away, flexible enough to tell lifestyle stories and help them find products wherever they meet the brand.

A visual language for everyday moments

I wanted it to feel like a beautiful magazine that someone put together by hand. Soft natural light, expressive serif type, and paper textures nod to Anthropologie's artsy side, and the same pieces work on a screen, in an inbox, or on a store wall.

FUNCTIONALITY

The hero button takes you to three chapters: morning, afternoon, and evening. Each one mixes lifestyle photos with product cards that link to the real product pages. On mobile, the sections stack in the same order and products scroll sideways, so the story still reads top to bottom.

IN-STORE EXPERIENCE

From inspiration to a space you can step into

ACTIVATION CONCEPT

A display table groups clothing, home, and beauty pieces around the three moments of the day. Botanical details and the sun illustration make it feel like the same campaign people saw online.

CUSTOMER EXPERIENCE

People find the campaign through store signs and the display itself. A QR code on the sign takes them to the mobile page if they want to keep browsing later.

The QR code here is a placeholder. In a real rollout it would open the mobile landing page.

Why it fits Anthropologie

Anthropologie has always been about individuality, art, and living a little more beautifully. This campaign leans into that by organizing fashion, home, and beauty around personal rituals, so different categories feel like they belong to the same story.

How it keeps the brand connected

Shared colors, type, illustrations, and a consistent voice make the campaign easy to recognize anywhere, while each format still gets the layout it needs.

Making the everyday extraordinary, one moment at a time.
